WESTWARD BOUND

Tell us your stories

By Col. Judy Marchetti
934th Aeromedical Staging Squadron commander

As we approach the mid point of 2008, many of us are turning our minds toward our upcoming AEF in 2009. We know our missions and what we need to do to deploy, and we certainly know that we are at war. However, something Maj. Gen. Martin Mazick, 22nd Air Force commander, said on his visit to our base last UTA has stuck with me.

Namely, that we are a “military at war, but a nation at peace.” In other words, most people in this country are not feeling or experiencing the war in their everyday lives.

This was further brought home during a conversation with one of my unit members that same day regarding his deployment to Iraq. He stated one of the common themes our deployed members have experienced since their return has been the lack of interest in their “stories”. I then asked him to tell me one of his stories. He proceeded to tell me about a 19-year-old soldier who had been admitted to the medical facility with burns so severe he was not expected to live.

This soldier’s parents were flying to Germany, and the medical team decided to do everything within their power to keep this young man alive until he reached Germany, so he could die in his parents arms. He then stated “we were successful, and I’ll remember that for the rest of my life”.

Talk about something taking your breath away, and what a testament to determination, selfless service and team work in the face of a difficult situation. I left that conversation with a realization of how important it is to hear our deplorers’ stories. In that spirit, I’d like to relay the following description of our Aeromedical Staging Squadron deployment to Balad AB, Iraq in 2006-2007, by Tech. Sgt. Ron Holbeck, Health Services Management technician.

“Thirty plus members of the 934th ASTS participated in an AEF deployment to Balad, ending in mid-May of 2007. We were away from our families, friends, civilian employers and general way of life for almost four months, doing a dangerous job requiring commitment, skill, perseverance and patience. During that time, we saw a wide variety of patients, ranging from small injuries obtained on a basketball court, to traumatic, life-altering injuries such as the lone survivor of a plane crash, victims of IED attacks, gunshot wounds, and many amputees.

Balad AB, Iraq, was the most frequently attacked base in Iraq during our stay. On average, there were three mortar attacks each day, with some landing in our housing areas or flying overhead. We heard gunfire along our perimeter, and some of our patients were people living a few doors down from us who had been injured in an attack. It was all a part of life in a war zone, and something we had to learn to deal with.

The majority of the ASTS members in Balad worked in the Contingency Aeromedical Staging Facility. Another five members worked in the Air Force Theater Hospital. Most worked 12-hour days, six days a week.

Honor Guard

Spreading pride across the midwest

By Tech. Sgt. Jeffrey S. Williams
934 AW Public Affairs

The 934th Airlift Wing base honor guard has been quite busy this fiscal year. Since the year began Oct. 1, honor guard members have driven over 23,000 miles to 54 funerals and 18 honor guard events in the Midwest region.

“We’re in Wisconsin 99 percent of the time,” said Master Sgt. Mary Miller, honor guard superintendent. “We are in Green Bay, Wausau, Appleton and Sheboygan quite often. We do the majority of our funerals in Wisconsin, which is why we are working on getting letters out to funeral homes in Minnesota. We want to tell them we exist.”

Now in its ninth year, the honor guard recently expanded their reach and membership, according to Sergeant Miller. With the closure of the Reserve base in Milwaukee, they became the first Reserve honor guard to augment two active duty bases – Grand Forks Air Force Base, N.D., and Scott AFB, Ill., in addition to joining forces with the 133rd Airlift Wing honor guard here.

The Sergeant explained the three types of funerals the group participates in.

“For veterans who have not stayed in long enough to retire, we provide two to three people to fold the flag and play taps,” she said. “For the retiree, we are authorized to bring seven people to serve as pallbearers, a firing party and taps. Those who die on active duty are authorized 20 people as pallbearers, firing party, taps and a color guard.”

If funerals aren’t enough, they also participate in civic activities like the Minnesota Twins baseball games and conferences, as well as the NCO induction ceremony.

“We basically do wing functions, not the squadron level,” she said.

Tech. Sgt. Paul Ives, 934th Airlift Wing chapel operations NCOIC, has been a member of the honor guard for five years. He is one of two buglers serving on the honor guard.

“When I first arrived here, I wanted to meet people in the wing. I wanted to find people in this organization who were good examples. Because I got into it right away, I had some good people who mentored me,” Sergeant Ives said.

He tries to commit to participating in at least two honor guard events each month.

“As a reservist, the drawback is to find the time in my schedule to go to an event somewhat far away,” he said. “Yet most of us will say this is the most rewarding thing that we do in the military.”

Service in the honor guard can be rewarding and fun, but there are certain challenges that come with the role.

“We did a funeral for an active duty Airman who died while at home on leave. It was hard for us to keep our military bearing while hearing the widow and her young children crying,” he said. “It was hard to not internalize and think about the emotions involved.”

“On the other hand, there are times when civilian family members don’t understand how important their loved ones military service is until the rifles are fired and taps played. It takes on a whole new meaning,” the Sergeant explained.

The other bugler, Senior Master Sgt. Doug Johnson, 934th Civil Engineer Squadron emergency management air reserve technician, joined the honor guard in 2002 because the previous bugler retired, leaving a vacancy.

“The idea of joining the honor guard was always in the back of my mind because of what it stands for – giving

Forget the ORI, here comes the military ball

By Master Sgt. Paul Zadach
934th AW Public Affairs

Nearly as big as the ORI, but not quite as intense, the 934th Airlift Wing Military Ball is set for Sept. 6 at the Crowne Plaza Riverfront Hotel in St. Paul.

Nationally known military comic and motivational speaker Jan Donahue will be the featured speaker at the event.

There are no uniform options specified in the Airman's Manual for this event. However, 1st Lt. Christine Dale, military ball project officer, says the event is black tie, with the military formal or mess dress as an option.

The evening begins with a social hour at 5 p.m. followed by dinner at 6:30pm. Jan Donahue entertains after dinner and dancing continues on into the night.

The hotel is located at 11 East Kellogg Blvd. in St. Paul. For those who just don't want to leave, rooms are available at a special rate of $99 per night. People may reserve their rooms online at www.crowneplaza.com/stpaul. The group/conference code is AIR.

Tickets go on sale during the June UTA and continue through the August drill. They are available from all first sergeants or from Lieutenant Dale, ext. 1956, or Senior Airman Nicole Silverthorne, ext. 1717.

This year's gala is being put together by the 934th Operations Group. The operations folks are working hard to keep ticket prices affordable for all who wish to attend. Last UTA, they put on a barbecue lunch to raise funds for the Ball. 934th OG members helped serve and prepare food which was provided by "BBQ Bob" Suter, a former Airman himself and father of a retired airman. Bob has been pulling his chuckwagon up to the 934th and donating his services for events since 2003.

Unlike the ORI, the 934th OG has completely eliminated MREs as a menu item. There will also be no grades given at the ball, but Lieutenant Dale is predicting an overall rating of "outstanding."

27th Aerial Port officer wins honors

By Senior Airman Josh Moshier
934th Public Affairs Staff writer

Another Flying Viking has made the 934th Airlift Wing and his unit proud with recognition from the major command-level.

Capt. Andrew Severt, 27th Aerial Port Squadron officer-in-charge of combat readiness, was named Air Reserve Command, Logistics Readiness Squadron, Company Grade Officer of the Year in an announcement made in April.

"I was shocked at first," Captain Severt said. "It caught me completely off guard. More than anything, it's a tribute to the Airmen I work for who make everything happen."

Captain Severt's highlights included a 122-day deployment to Manas Air Base, Kyrgyzstan; the movement of 14,752 short tons of cargo and 57,912 passengers on 1,327 missions under his watch; and the redesign of immigration procedures, which streamlined processing time by 50 percent.

"I believe the deployment is what helped me stand out," the captain said. "All the cargo and personnel we moved, as well as the outreach programs we were involved in over there, really helped."

His contributions did not go unnoticed at the local level, either.

"Captain Severt is one more shining example of what makes the 934th AW the best Reserve wing in the Air Force – it's Airmen," said Col. Tim Tarchick, 934th AW commander.

Never lost on the wing's newest award-winner is the impact of the teamwork that makes every mission a success.

"The biggest thing was the Airmen – they are phenomenal," Captain Severt said. "Without them making my job easier, I wouldn't have been recognized. I work for them, and it's my pleasure."

934TH AIRLIFT WING HERITAGE

The Centennial Memorial Naval Gun is a four-inch piece which fired the first shot on the side of the Allies in WWII. A crew of nine Minnesota men manned the gun during the December 7, 1941 attack on Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

The gun was flown in from Washington D.C. with cooperation of the Navy and Air Force. The gun was salvaged from the scrapped destroyer, the USS Ward. Originally planned to be an exhibit at the Smithsonian Institute, the gun was brought to Minnesota and placed on the Capitol approach in St. Paul May 10, 1958.

Airlift Squadron seeks loadmasters, navigators

The 96th Airlift Squadron is looking for people who would like to train into the loadmaster or navigator career fields.

The loadmaster field currently offers a $20,000 sign on bonus for a four-year commitment. A loadmaster is an enlisted aircrew member who performs loading and off loading aircraft functions, pre-flight and post-flight of aircraft and aircraft systems.

Other responsibilities include computing weight and balance and other mission specific qualification duties. "Loads" provide for safety and comfort of passengers and troops, and security of cargo, mail, and baggage during flight. They also conduct cargo and personnel airdrops.

The training takes six to eight months with an option for an additional six months on the job training.

C-130 navigators are commissioned officers who navigate aircraft to accomplish assigned mission. Navigators plan and prepare for missions, review mission tasking, intelligence, and weather information. Navigators must possess a four year degree, pass the Air Force Officer Qualification Test, and interview with the 96th Airlift Squadron before entering training. Navigators must also make an eight year commitment to the Air Force Reserve. Both aircrew positions require an 80-100 day commitment per year.

For more information about becoming a loadmaster contact Chief Master Sgt. Tom Foss at ext. 1718.

Potential navigators should contact Lt. Col. Kenny Rogers at ext. 1728.

The squadron, as well as much of the wing leadership, bid farewell to a long time friend, mentor, and warrior in that of Chief Master Sgt. David Halverson. He regretfully, and somewhat begrudgingly, retired after a long and distinguished career of 32+ years. Maj. Gen. Martin Mazick, who was visiting the 934th AW, presented Chief Halverson the Meritorious Service Award, second device. Memories were shared, hands were shaken, backs were slapped, and hugs passed out. The retirement culminated with an interesting video prepared by Tech. Sgt. Kraig Crandall.

Grey area retirees can be JROTC instructors

Air Force Junior ROTC is now able to hire Traditional Guardsmen and Reservists who have retired but are not yet drawing their retirement (“grey area” retirees). The passage of the 2007 National Defense Authorization Act allows AFJROTC to tap into the large pool of highly trained and motivated Guardsmen and Reservists.

“We are looking for retired Guard/Reserve officers and NCOs who want to continue serving their communities by teaching the next generation of leaders,” said Col. Richard J. Ragaller, director of Air Force Junior ROTC at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala.

AFJROTC currently has over 50 officer and over 30 NCO instructor positions open at locations across the U.S. There are 869 units world-wide and 10 new units will open up for the next school year. Over 101,000 students are enrolled in AFJROTC.

“It’s exciting to have the chance to add these outstanding Airmen to the AFJROTC family,” he said. “I don’t think there can be any more rewarding career than “Building Better Citizens the Air Force’s Core Values and set the highest standards of conduct and appearance for themselves and their students,” he said.

Traditional Guard/Reserve applicants must have been retired within the past 5 years or less with 20 “good years” of service and possess a DD Form 214/NGB Form 22, ANG/USA-FR Point Credit Summary and retire with at least 3600 retirement points. For more information about Guard/Reserve requirements, go to www.afboats.af.mil/AFJROTC/grayarea.asp.

Officers must have a bachelor’s degree or higher and NCOs must have a minimum of high school diploma and must obtain an associate’s degree within five years of employment. Additional education degrees and teacher certification are an advantage and may be required by some school districts.

Instructors wear the Air Force uniform and must meet the Air Force appearance and weight/body fat standards. They must also have high standards of military bearing and moral character. AFJROTC provides TDY funding for new instructors to complete Air University’s two-week Aerospace Science Instructor Course at Maxwell AFB prior to receiving certification for instructor duty. The course includes training on instructor performance, standards and accountability as representatives of the Air Force; learning theory; communication skills; teaching methods; lesson planning and student

The mission of Air Force Junior ROTC is “Building Better Citizens for America.” The Air Force Core Values provide the basis for the program. The curriculum provides cadets with leadership opportunities, life skills education, team-building experiences, character education and academic studies. Air Force JROTC provides its students with the tools for success after high school.

For more information about instructor opportunities, call toll free (866) 235-7682, ext. 35112 or 32535. The DSN number is 493-5112 or 2535. You can also go to www.afboats.af.mil/AFJROTC/instructors.asp for complete instructor requirements and application information. (AFRC News)

Shuttle riders requested to pack light

By Tech. Sgt. Jeffrey S. Williams
934 AW Public Affairs

Due to the large numbers of people on the Chicago and Milwaukee training flights, those who fly to the 934th Airlift Wing for the monthly drills are requested to pack light due to space limitations.

The subject was discussed during the May 4 Human Resources Development Council meeting.

"We are not limiting the number of pieces that a reservist can bring with them at this time," said Col. Stephen DeWerff, 934th Airlift Wing vice commander. "We are just asking you to use your discretion when packing and bring only the minimum amount of luggage you need for the weekend."

Reservists are reminded they need to be in full compliance with AFI 36-2903, the Air Force dress and appearance regulations, while wearing civilian attire on the flight, not just while in uniform.

Those on the flight are required to make their lodging reservations for the next drill no later than five days following the current drill.

"Due to manpower limitations, we may not be able to guarantee shuttle transportation from off-base hotels to the base at some point in the future. I'm just asking all reservists to keep this in mind when making their lodging reservations each month," Colonel DeWerff said.

We were driven to work hard for our patients, all of whom were sacrificing much more than any of us were.

The CASF was a staging facility where patients stayed while awaiting aeromedical evacuation to the next level of care, usually in Kuwait, Qatar, or Germany. Prior to flight, CASF staff addressed any issues that could affect a patient's response to altitude. CASF staff redressed wounds, monitored cardiac patients, gave intravenous fluids and administered medications to ensure patients remained stabilized for the upcoming flight.

When flight time arrived, we transported the patients to the flightline and loaded them on the plane. Members of the 934th ASTS had leadership roles in the CASF, including that of Chief Nurse, Chief Flight Surgeon, and day-shift NCOIC.

The AFTH, a fully functioning, state-of-the-art hospital, was a much larger operation than the CASF. Located in a tent, the AFTH received patients from helicopters from throughout Iraq. The hospital performed surgical operations on the most extreme injuries one can receive in war.

The AFTH offered diverse services, including a blood bank where members could donate blood, and was the largest Air Force hospital to be deployed since the Vietnam War. Members of the 934th ASTS filled key roles in the AFTH, including

First Sergeant, NCOIC of the Apheresis Lab, and NCOIC of Hospital Logistics.

Deployments for most people are life changing events. I put it on a scale with other large milestones in life, such as graduating from high school, getting married, or having children.

For most of us, it was an event that changed our lives, and there will be a line drawn where we will say "before Iraq" and "after Iraq."

A person sees, hears and experiences things on a deployment that aren't experienced anywhere else. In our medical arena, we often saw uplifting miracles and terrible tragedies on the same day. We missed holidays and events at home, and these were often the hardest days. However, I believe we returned as better airmen and better people.

Thanks for listening and don't forget to ask those who have deployed to tell you their stories.

Honor Guard

people the honors due them,” Sergeant Johnson said. “I thought veterans deserved better than using the bugle that played a CD of taps they were using at the time. They didn’t have a live bugler at that time, so that’s why I joined.”

“The basic honor guard training seemed a little daunting at first with different commands and new ways of doing things. Once I did it over and over again, and became comfortable for me. I got used to it. The first time I played taps at a funeral, I was shaking like a leaf. Now that I’ve done it more than fifty times, it is a lot easier,” he added.

The highlight of Sergeant Johnson’s career was a particular funeral near Grand Rapids, Minn., a few years ago, for a World War II veteran who served with the famed, “Flying Tigers” squadron.

“Since I was in seventh grade, I studied the Flying Tigers flying their P-40 aircraft in China,” he said. “I folded the flag and played taps for this gentleman at a small funeral ceremony. I was in awe because I helped honor a member of the unit I idolized as a youth. I got to play taps for this gentleman and it was a way of bringing everything together for me.”

According to Sergeant Miller, new people can join any time, but applicants need to have the approval of their supervisor, commander and first sergeant, in addition to the application.

“It takes a lot of dedication,” she said. “It’s a volunteer program and takes about six months to get fully trained on the firing party, pallbearing, honor guard and flag folding. We need people who can give a commitment.”

Sergeant Miller said practices are held twice a month at building 750, the new honor guard building. Potential applicants can contact her at (612) 713-1647.
