30 Years

The time has flown by

By Col. Stephen J. DeWerff 934th Airlift Wing vice commander

Time flies when you are having fun; it's already time to say goodbye!

This will be my final Viking Flyer article and I am grateful for the chance to say goodbye. Thirty years ago this month I was finishing my last course requirements for graduation from college and waiting to be commissioned in the United States Air Force. Because of a required course conflict with my Air Force Reserve Officer Training Course class, I had to finish up my degree program over summer school at the University of Illinois and wasn't able to be commissioned with the rest of my class. When I was commissioned a second lieutenant on August 11, 1978, I could never have imagined that summer what the rest of my Air Force career had in store for me.

I was extremely fortunate to have been awarded a four year Air Force ROTC scholarship to attend the University of Illinois. Of course in 1972-73, when I started the application process, the Vietnam War was still going on and the military was not a very popular place to be. Today's talented young men and women competing for the same opportunity would never have allowed me to be competitive for scholarship. I was just a small town farm boy from rural Illinois with aspirations of flying Air Force jets. My parents, though supportive of my plan, figured there was no way anyone was ever going to let me fly their airplanes. My father had watched me destroy my fair share of farm equipment while helping him farm while growing up.

A few months later, newly married, my wife Mary and I were on our way to Reese Air Force Base, Texas for undergraduate pilot training. I still remember the conversation we had prior to leaving Illinois. "How much are you going to get paid each month," she asked? I said, "I didn't know or care, as long as the let me fly." I thought it was a stupid question, she of course being rational couldn't believe I didn't know what amount of money we were going to make. I figured it would be enough to live on; we weren't the only ones in this situation. The rest of the story is history.

Anyway, 30 years later, here I am at Minneapolis-St. Paul Air Reserve Base saying goodbye and farewell after 30 years of commissioned service. So it is with deep appreciation to all who I have met and with a tremendous amount of great memories that I now come to the final chapter in my Air Force career. I owe a tremendous debt to many fine Airmen who have positively shaped my career over the years. I want to first thank former Wing Commander, Col. Jim Muscatell, for giving me the opportunity to come to Minneapolis and serve as your vice wing commander, the best job I have ever had by far in my career. I also want to thank my boss, Col. Tim Tarchick, for allowing me to stay on and finish my final two years here with everyone.

Colonel Tarchick has led us through every inspection the Air Force could throw at us and because of your hard work and determination; we have excelled at every one. I want to thank everyone in the wing staff; especially the full time staff in the wing office. A special thanks to Nancy Ripley, I would not be as effective in my job without her help and support.

I want to thank all our group and squadron commanders, past and present. We have been blessed with a great group of senior staff. Their leadership and vision have helped maintain the reputation of this fine base. I want to thank the members of the 96th Airlift Squadron for allowing me to fly with them and for teaching an old dog a new trick flying the C-130 Hercules; quite a different experience for a pilot who had spent the past 20 plus years flying KC-10's.

I want to thank the 27th Aerial Port, the 934th Civil Engineer and the 934th Aeromedical Evacuation Squadrons for all their post UTA parties. Thanks as well to the folks at the 934th Security Forces and the 934th Aeromedical Staging Squadrons for all their help and support these past few years. I also wanted to mention my thanks to the gang at the 934th Military Personnel Flight for all the unsung help and support they provided to me and everyone here at the base. I want to mention a word of thanks to Ms. Margo Leslie. Our 934th lodging and clubs have been identified as some of the best in all of the Air Force and have been my home away from home these past few years. And of course the 934th Services Squadron deserves recognition for providing the best meal in town on UTA's.

Lastly, I want to thank each and every one of you, reservist and civilian alike, for the outstanding professional job each and every one of you do! Thanks for your hard work, your creativity, your initiative and most importantly your professionalism. The future holds many challenges for each of you; in fact the only constant in your Air Force future is change. Your leadership will make those changes work, to make our Air Force Reserve the great organization that it is today and one that will be even better in the future. I leave the reserve today knowing that our military future is in great hands. I thank each and every one of you for allowing me to serve as your vice wing commander for the past four years. Enjoy your time in the military, it goes by quickly. God Speed and God Bless. I love you all and will miss you dearly! Steve

934 AES takes on ICMOP mission

By Senior Airman Josh Moshier 934 AW Public Affairs

Every single day, in every nook and cranny of the world, Airmen from the 934th Airlift Wing are helping in the fight in the Global War on Terror. From the streets of Baghdad, to the mountainous terrain of Afghanistan, to the scorched earth of the Horn of Africa, the Flying Vikings are doing their part.

While deploying to foreign lands such as these is the typical image many Americans have of our armed forces' role in GWOT, and while those stories are the ones that lead the nightly news, the fight doesn't begin and end overseas.

The 934th Aeromedical Evacuation Squadron recently

deployed as the lead unit to the 775th Expeditionery AES, a total force squadron with Air Force Reserve, Air National Guard and Active Duty components.

The squadron has a total of 79 personnel who man a Command Cell located at Scott AFB, Ill. and three Detachments; Det 1 at Andrews AFB, Md. Det 2 at Travis AFB, Calif. and Det 3 at Scott AFB. The Detachments are composed of AE crews which manage in-flight care and safety for patients aboard fixed wing AE missions or intratheater fixed wing airlift and aeromedical evacuation operations teams responsible for managing flight crews, equipment and supplies.

The 775 EAES is tasked with the Continental United States patient redistribution mission, returning our wounded warriors from OIF/OEF to their home bases after they arrive to CONUS from Ramstein AB, Germany. This is part of the Integrated Continental United States Medical Operations Plan (ICMOP).

Chief Master Sgt. Christopher Knowles, 934 AES

technician explained, "This is not a new mission for the 934 AES, since they deployed 21 members to the newly established 775 EAES in April 2003 when the command responsibility rested with the 375 Provisional AD unit." Command responsibility shifted to the Reserve Command in September 2006 and will transfer back to the AD in September 2008.

Col Cherie Roberts, 934 AES and 775 EAES commander said, "I am very proud of the dedication and commitment that our members have shown to the ICMOP mission over the past year and a half while also preparing and successfully completing a heavy inspection cycle including HSI/ UCI and ORE/ORI."

The 934 AES has been one of the units with primary ICMOP responsibility since August 2007 and have deployed 65 lines in support of ICMOP since January 07. In addition to 16 deployments to the AOR the AES has filled 36 lines at Ramstein AB Germany. This team transports injured soldiers from the AOR to Ramstein GE and on to CONUS. It's conceivable that a serviceman could be transported each leg of his trip by a member of the 934 AES.

"We are honored to be able to transport our wounded warriors back home and witness their courage and steadfastness to the war. Our squadron has maintained a high ops tempo over the last eighteen months and I believe the gratification that we receive from caring for these soldiers has reinvigorated our squadron, heightened our training awareness and added to our retention," said Colonel Roberts.

While the scope and magnitude of the mission is obvious, a further credit to the 934 AES and its members is how smooth and efficient the deployments took place. Needing to be in place as early as April 9, many Airmen were required to in-process from April's Operational Readiness Inspection in Gulfport, Miss., and simultaneously out-process for their various ICMOP destinations.

Chief Knowles, who participated in the ORI and deployed a few weeks later to the Command Cell, said, "The outstanding effort required to in-process the ORI players and then redeploy them for ICMOP required a great deal of planning and effort not only from our squadron but also from the base as a whole. The great attitude of the deployers and the terrific deployment support made the whole process incredibly flawless."

Colonel Roberts added, "The 934 AES is known throughout the system as a unit comprised of hard working, superior performers with great attitudes and they certainly live up to that reputation".

"I can't say enough about our Airmen," said Col. Tim Tarchick, 934 AW commander. "They put in many long, hard hours to have a successful ORI, and then they came right back and switched their focus immediately to the task at hand – deploying in support of our mission overseas. And their mission couldn't be more important. They're responsible for making sure our war fighters are returned home to their families so they can recover from their injuries with loved ones."

Flying Vikings go to camp purple

It was a bright sunny July day as the 934th purple clad C-130 flightdeck display made its way to Camp St. Croix in Hudson, Wis., a camp for children of deployed military members.

Master Sgt. Eric Johnson and Tech. Sgt. David Dudash, 934th Maintenance Squadron along with Wendy Johnson, a civilian volunteer, assisted the Operation Purple camp participants in an event designed for fun and educational hands-on experience.

Hundreds of children ranging in ages from 5 to 16 got to sit in the pilot and copilot seats of the Air Force Reserve C-130E flightdeck, push buttons, flip switches and handle the realistic flight controls.

"The kids just had a blast with this thing, we were definitely the highlight of the various displays," Sergeant Dudash said.

The purpose of the July 3 visit was to conduct a Military Day "open house" for the children attending Camp Purple to better understand the jobs of their military parents while deployed, and to share feelings with other children of deployed parents. The visit was further highlighted by a visit from the Marine congressional liaison, Brigadier General Michael Regner. "It's not too often that you get a hearty handshake and a slap on the back all the way from the Pentagon," Sergeant Johnson said.

The National Military Families Association implemented 12 different Operation Purple camps across the country

"I am writing to thank you so much for sponsoring OPC this summer ... they have not stopped talking about all the fun they had last week...you have made a BIG difference in our lives and many other military families lives!"

Letter received from OPC parent in 2004. Due to the success of this camp program, NMFA expanded the program and has hosted more than 10,000 military children who have or will experience deployment.

In 2008, there will be 100 weeks of camp held in 62 locations in 37 states and territories.

These free, week-long, overnight camps are open to all military children. The program aims to help military kids experience carefree fun while also learning coping skills to deal with war-related stress and fostering relationships with others who know what they are going through.

Air Force Reserve to test force support squadron concept

ROBINS AIR FORCE BASE, Ga. – Starting in October, the Air Force Reserve Command will test a new force support structure by merging mission support squadrons and services squadrons at six locations throughout the United States.

In the test, which will run for one year, the affected units will merge manpower and personnel functions with services. Combining these services in one organization is designed to streamline processes, maximize customer service and cut costs associated with maintaining separate organizations.

"The Air Force has become a leaner force," said Col. Joseph Vivori, director of manpower and personnel at Headquarters AFRC.

"As a result, our people have to make the best use of the resources they have," he said. "By combining manpower, personnel and services under one manager, we will reduce overall costs and give our people more flexibility to respond to their customers."

The test will involve two kinds of units - stand-alone locations and locations that receive support from host active-duty units. Stand-alone test locations are March Air Reserve Base, Calif.: Naval Air Station Joint Reserve Base Fort Worth, Texas: and Youngstown Air Reserve Station, Ohio. Test locations that will receive some support from their hosts are MacDill AFB, Fla.; Hill AFB, Utah; and McGuire AFB, N.J. Labor relations bargaining obligations will be satisfied with local unions in advance of the test.

Stand-alone locations will have four flights – force development, community support, civilian personnel, and readiness and plans. Supported locations will have two flights – force development and operations, which contains many of the elements of a readiness and plans flight.

"Force support squadrons are designed to bring people and services together," said Maj. Gen. Allan R. Poulin, AFRC vice commander, who approved the test for the command. "Like the active force, we will have one agency to care for our people and manage the services that support them. It makes good business sense for us to organize the same way we deploy overseas."

Airmen and their families can expect to continue to have the same world-class support, care and facilities they've always had, say command officials. They emphasize that the merger is not about downsizing but consolidating processes and programs to better serve people.

After the one-year test ends, AFRC officials will determine how to implement force support squadrons for the command.

Traditional Reservist named top AF first sergeant

ROBINS AIR FORCE BASE, Ga.

The Air Force has selected a traditional reservist as its First Sergeant of the Year for 2008.

Master Sgt. Jeffrey A. Gray of the 328th Airlift Squadron, Niagara Falls Air Reserve Station, N.Y., is reportedly the first member of the air reserve components chosen for the annual award.

"It's all about helping people," said Sergeant Gray, describing his military and civilian jobs.

Sergeant Gray recently deployed to Afghanistan for eight months as first > sergeant of the 755th Expeditionary Mission Support Group.

While there, he cared for more than 1,000 Airmen at 20 remote locations. They performed a unique mission - the provincial reconstruction, security and training of local Afghan national army soldiers in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

welfare of his people directly helped them perform their wartime mission.

Sergeant Gray began his military career as an aircraft electrical systems specialist. He has since taken assignments in combat communications, satellite communications, wing history and a first sergeant in services, communications and operations.

He is a veteran of Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm and a 12-year veteran firefighter with the City of Buffalo, certified as an emergency medical technician and fire service instructor.

"I'm assigned to a rough neighborhood, so I've seen a lot," said the firefighter. "I've seen stabbings, shootings, watched buildings burn down and saved them. I've saved babies and had them die, seen my fellow fire fighters hurt and brought them back from the edge."

The Air Force established its first sergeant of the year award in 1985 to recognize contributions and leadership qualities exhibited by Air Force first sergeants.

The 96th Airlift Squadron is looking for people who would like to train into the loadmaster or navigator career fields.

The loadmaster field currently offers a $20,000 sign-on bonus for a four-year commitment. A loadmaster is an enlisted aircrew member who performs loading and off loading aircraft functions, pre-flight and post-flight of aircraft and aircraft systems.

Other responsibilities include computing weight and balance and other mission specific qualification duties.

"Loads" provide for safety and comfort of passengers and troops, and security of cargo, mail, and baggage during flight. They also conduct cargo and personnel airdrops.

The training takes six to eight months with an option for an additional six months on the job training.

C-130 navigators are commissioned officers who navigate aircraft to accomplish assigned mission. Navigators plan and prepare for missions, review mission tasking, intelligence, and weather information. Navigators must posess a four year degree, pass the Air Force Officer Qualification Test, and interview with the 96th Airlift Squadron before entering training. Navigators must also make an eight year commitment to the Air Force Reserve. Both aircrew positions require an 80-100 day commitment per year.

For more information about becoming a loadmaster contact Chief Master Sgt. Tom Foss at 612-713-1718. Potential navagators should contact Lt. Col. Kenny Rogers at ext. 612-713-1728.

Clubs offers military free cash rewards

This summer, Air Force Clubs is partnering with Chase Bank to launch an enhanced cash-back, Military Free Cash Rewards Program. Additionally, new club membership applicants can choose between a MasterCard with the enhanced rewards program or a limiteduse Proprietary credit card without rewards. These new card options will be featured on new AF Club membership applications. The new campaign runs from July 15, 2008 to October 15, 2008.

To showcase the new benefits, Air Force Clubs is inviting all non-members to sign up free with no dues payment for six months. The 934th Services Clubs will be hosting exclusive events for new members who sign up during the campaign (events will also be open to current members).

The Military Free Cash Rewards Program offers members two points per dollar on card purchases made on base in Services activities, commissaries and the Base Exchange outlets. This includes all on base gasoline purchases beginning in July. Off-base card usage earns one point per dollar spent.

As a special incentive, each new applicant can instantly win from $5 to $100 just for signing up.

AAFES gives back to Minneapolis-St. Paul base

Shoppers who exercised their exchange benefit at the BX, online at www.aafes.com or over the phone through the Exchange Catalog last year helped make the military community a better place as the Army & Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) estimates it delivered more than $269 million in support to Morale, Welfare and Recreation (MWR) programs in FY 2007. These contributions to America's military represented an average per capita dividend of approximately $272 for every active duty Soldier and Airman.

Purchases made by Military Members at the Twin Cities BX and MCSS last year generated a dividend of $235,031.00. These funds are critical to MWR's ability to enhance local programs and facilities including the Gym, etc..

Historically, roughly two-thirds of AAFES earnings are paid to MWR programs. In addition to funding MWR efforts, AAFES earnings are used to build new stores or renovate existing facilities without expense to the Federal government. Funds to contract these new or replacement facilities also come entirely from sales of merchandise and services.

"The bottom line is that every time troops shop their exchange, a portion of their purchase goes towards supporting quality of life programs, facilities and non-appropriated fund construction projects," said Williams. "Seeing the financial benefit this and other military communities reap makes the dayto-day challenges of delivering the exchange benefit very much worth the commitment and sacrifice needed to operate efficiently and maximize the investment military families at Minneapolis/ St. Paul ARS are making in their BX."
